Health and Emotional Well-being are a top priority for successful schools

This is a topical and interactive conference & workshop

Leaders and managers have significant influence to shape a healthy working culture that nourishes staff well-being and underpins improved organisational performance. In today's pressured working environments, where so many demands are made on education professionals, it is more important than ever that leaders and managers take care of their own well-being and that of their colleagues and their students.

The health of an organisation is founded on the welfare and well-being of those who work within it. Truly efficient and effective organisations tend to be happy places with low staff sickness absence.

This can all too often be overlooked in the rush to meet deadlines, targets and in dealing with the many rigors of school and college life.

The purpose of this conference is to encourage leaders to make this a top priority.

Who is it for?

It is suitable for leaders at all levels in both primary, secondary schools and colleges, including Heads, senior leaders, support staff and any other staff with some leadership responsibility.

What are the benefits?

- To learn more about well-being and its value to sustainable success
- To take away ideas and practical strategies to prioritise and promote well-being
